

Horizon Mirror

Designed by KaschKasch for Normann Copenhagen

Mirror Variations

The sleek and geometrical Horizon mirror is now available in stainless-steel. The new, elegant, and timeless variant sparks new life to the collection as it plays with contrasts and depth. Horizon's soft design language with gently rounded edges stands in contrast to the rawness and vigorousness of the stainless steel, giving an interesting and contrast-filled visual expression. A playful element is also granted to the space, as the new variant reflects the light and colors of the surrounding environment, adding even more depth to the design.

The design duo KaschKasch's persistent search for the perfect hybrid between functionality and aesthetics is materializing in the Horizon wall mirrors. With a simple geometric design, the KaschKasch mirror variations create a poetic play on reflections.

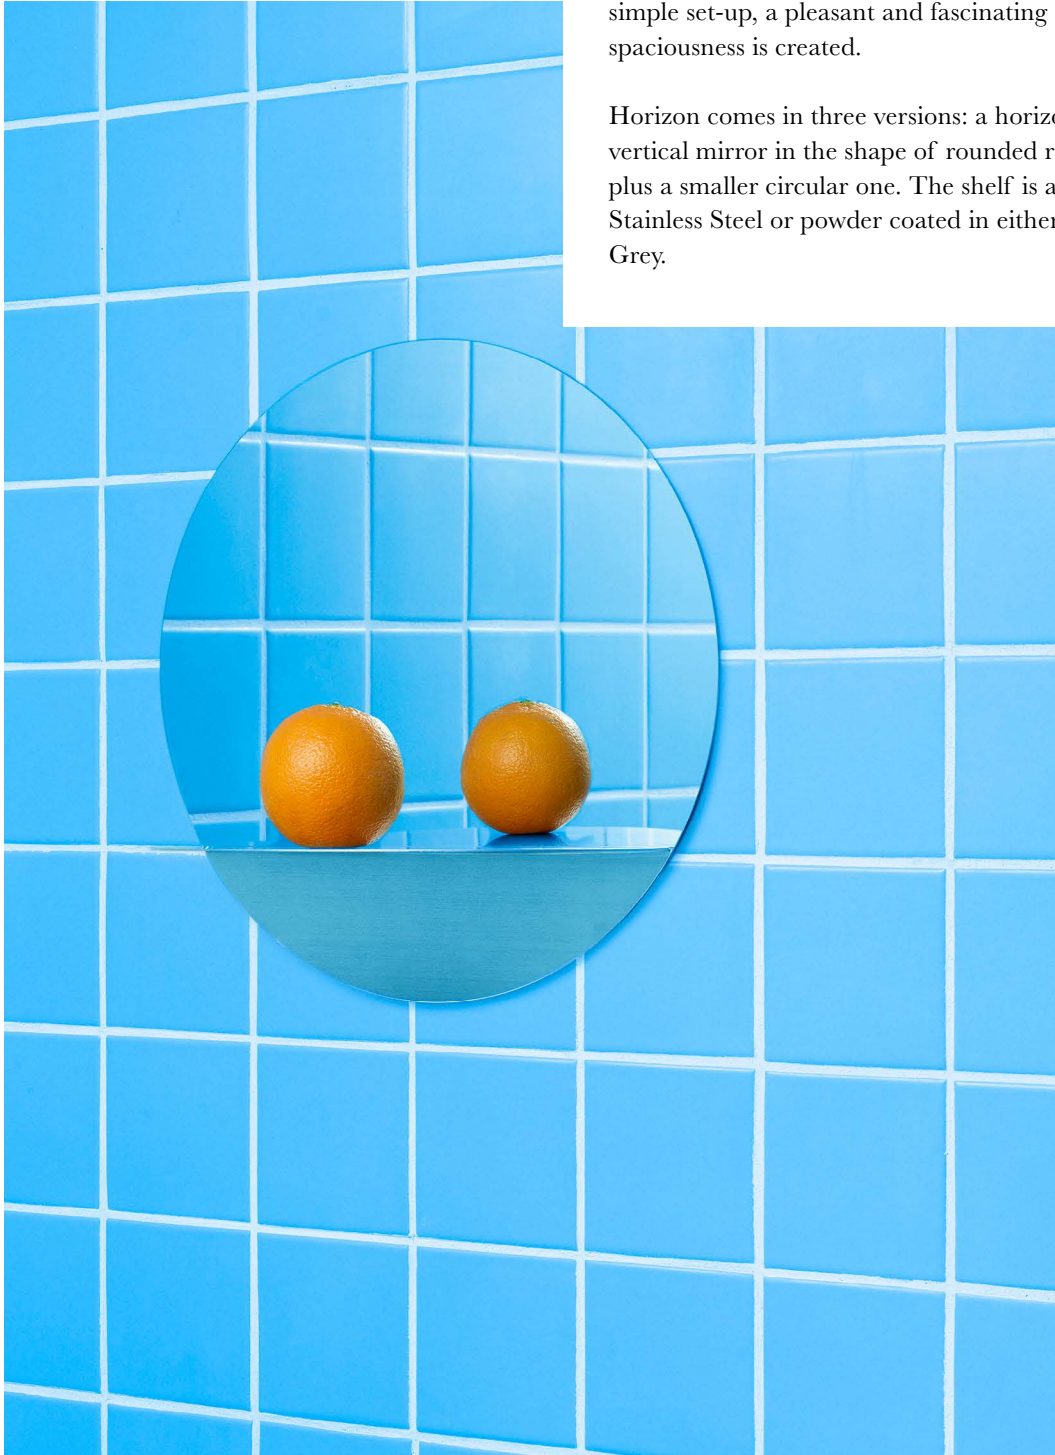

Horizon is a collection of wall mirrors in varying geometric shapes that all have a steel shelf integrated into the design. The shelf serves as a practical place to put things on, at the same time creating a beautiful visual effect.

“The idea came to us when we were making models from sheets of paper thinking of the horizon you see when you are at the seaside. It is a playful, and somehow poetic, experience to see the duplication in the mirror,” KaschKasch says when explaining the design.

The reflection in the mirror gives depth to the horizon of the steel shelf while the items placed on the shelf are duplicated in the reflection. With a very simple set-up, a pleasant and fascinating sense of spaciousness is created.

Horizon comes in three versions: a horizontal and a vertical mirror in the shape of rounded rectangles, plus a smaller circular one. The shelf is available in Stainless Steel or powder coated in either White or Grey.
